Vatra i ništa

Svest o pesmi

Mene ničega više nije stid.
Klonu sunce preko svega. Željen plod pun je noći. Glas, što sebe sanja, zid otkri u daljini gde zazidan mi brod.

U tom zidu čuvam svoju gordost, pevam
iz te zazidanosti lepše no na slobodi.
Otkud ta moć da sebi odolevam,
a ne odoleše vinogradi rodni!

Je li to čudna želja da se živi
bez sebe? Želja za pesmom bez pesnika?
Od prošlosti i zaborava vreme što se divi izdajstvu moga zaustavljenog lika?

Da li to znači reći promeni: neću!
I ostaviti pesmu da se sama menja?
Pokloniti sebe životinjama i cveću
i snagu svoju dati gladi crnog korenja?

U ovoj noći mene nije stid
što pevam iz zida lepše no na slobodi.
Sunce mi u peti bridu. Blešti zid na kraju puta što nikud ne vodi.

Reč vatra! ja sam joj rekao hvala što živim toj reči čiju posedujem moć da je kažem.
Njen pepeo je zaborav. Ako pred tom reči skrivim Branko Miljković (Serbian Cyrillic: Бранко Миљковић) (29 January 1934 in Niš, Yugoslavia – 12 February 1961 in Zagreb) was an iconic Serbian poet. He was best known across Yugoslavia and the Soviet bloc for his influential writings. At a time when no one could have foreseen anything but a bright future for the poet, he died prematurely in 1961 at the age of 27. He was found hanging from a tree in Zagreb, Croatia. This controversial incident was officially recorded as a suicide. In his one-line poem "Epitaph," he writes "Ubi me prejakā reā" ("I was killed by a word too strong") almost sensing his premature end of life. During the last years of his life, he published five books of poetry (I Wake Her in Vain, Death against Death, The Origin of Hope, Fire and Nothing, The Shining Blood, criticism, and translations of the French Symbolists and Russian poet Osip Mandelstam. His influence still continues. From a poem Jugoslavija, he writes -- "Here is how it started in today's necessity everything without fire burning into itself" predicting the inevitable that was to come some three decades later.
